Director's Note

Davy Crockett, or, Be Sure You're Right, Then Go Ahead, written by Frank Murdoch and starring a favorite American actor, Frank Mayo, in the title role, opened in Rochester, New York, in September 1872. From that time on, until Mayo's death in 1896, this popular play toured the country year after year. It became a family favorite throughout America especially in the cattle and mining communities of the West. It was also performed in England.

We present this traditional American melodrama as a salute to the frontier theatre of our country. This production is based on the original 1872 script and follows the typical programming style of family entertainment of the period: a comedy in five acts, a patriotic address, and a mirth-provoking farce sprinkled with numerous songs, dances, and witty sayings between acts.

We hope that you enjoy our salute to the "original"
Davy Crockett.
